Why

- Meaningful contribution
- Agents of positive change
- Global citizenship competencies
- society forever in flux
- Socially responsible university

How

- Forge links between university and society
- Local to global level
- Facilitate transformative engagement

What

- Create support for building bridges
- Long lasting partnerships
- Attend to both perspectives

Wider context

- Internationally connected society
- Regional collaboration

Definition Community Engagement

- The community/external partners can be NGOs, nonprofit organizations, businesses, government, schools, civic movements or citizens themselves, whether local (regional), national or international.
- Engagement is seen as the process by which universities undertake joint activities with external partners. Those activities are reciprocal (and thus have, potentially different, added value/benefits for all actors/parties).
- The social needs are diverse: of political, economic, cultural, social, technological, sustainable, etc. nature. It is important that the needs start from society and affect the quality of life (political activism, social entrepreneurship, volunteering, etc.).

Good afternoon!

developing key competences to initiate positive social change

The world is changing and it becomes increasingly important to apply a new way of working in order to address the world's challenges.

The education system plays a crucial role in educating the new generation with key competences so that they can contribute to positive social change in this modern world.

We recognize these changes and are adapting our approach, but in reality, this applies to young people and everyone around them.

Nice to meet you!

Goed Volk aims to help people at all levels to develop themselves by fostering thinking, doing, and mutual understanding.

This is achieved by developing and supporting promising socio-cultural projects and providing training and workshops that contribute to people and communities.

What do we do?

Training

Activating the youth by:

- community-based learning
- challenge-based learning
- social entrepreneurship education

using a non-formal approach.

Sharing

Give talks and workshops in places like these to support, underline, and promote transformative engagement.

Training

young people embedded in communities or community activities who wish to improve or have leadership skills and competences in managing a hub of people.

Based on European entrepreneurship competence framework

Objectives

- Activate greater youth participation in (local) communities
- Teach a new competency profile for 'youth community leadership'
- Create engagement of local decision makers
- Effectively accompany participatory processes and deliver targeted initiatives in communities
